

SUSAN LANGONE

ARTIST / DESIGNER / THERAPIST

Susan Langone has been an artist her entire life. She has been living and working as a mixed media artist from her riverfront art studio in Piermont, NY for the past 24 years.

Formally trained as a Fine Artist in painting, Susan received her BFA from The Fashion Institute of Technology in 1991. Upon graduating she gained employment with famed interior and product designer Larry Laslo, which sparked her long time career as an interior designer. While working with her design clients, Susan would often create paintings for their interiors, allowing her to continue her passion for making art by incorporating it into her home design.

Several years later Susan furthered her education in art and received a Masters of Science in Art Therapy and Counseling from The College of New Rochelle. Today as a licensed Art Therapist, Susan has a private Art Therapy practice known as The Center for Resiliency. Her approach to healing with art is based on Human Potential, and focuses on fostering resiliency in those who suffer from depression, anxiety and disordered behaviors.

ARTIST / DESIGNER / THERAPIST

Susan Langone considers her artwork to be Modern Folk. Throughout her career as an artist and designer Susan has always collected vintage fabrics. Some call her paintings “painted quilts”. Her work speaks to all things handmade, and high touch; representing the techniques of yesteryear and lost arts of textile design, cutting, pasting and sewing. Her work stands in direct opposition to the fast graphic snippets of today's high tech insta-art. Her sophisticated eye for color and combing patterns has served as her guiding light for her creations, and fully exudes her optimism and positivity.
